This is an interesting concept - you're a mayor of a small city with a clock tower on it, and your goal is to restore it to its former glory. A mechanism within the tower allows you to place any object anywhere else in the city, thus giving you the control of constructing buildings and doing almost anything else you want. You can even build a bierkeller (German for beer hall, but still!) in the middle of the plaza and claim it as your own. You can't place just any object, however. Each object has a "style" which affects the look of it, and you have to place it at the designated location to get a specific style (and use it). Most objects are placed using a "pick and place" mode which lets you grab the object from your inventory and place it at the current location. Unfortunately, this doesn't work for some objects, like the brick tower I just built for instance - I had to place the brick manually. I think this is because of an oversight - there are a few objects that don't have a proper Pick and Place mechanism, so if it's not there for them, they're unpluggable. All in all, the experience has been pretty good - I think the interface is a bit clunky, but it's not all that much different than the iPhone's interface, and the way it's been done
