Septic arthritis: a rare complication of intra-articular corticosteroid injection. Septic arthritis is a rare complication of intra-articular injection. A healthy,

26-year-old woman presented with fevers, chills, and joint pain following an intra-articular injection of corticosteroids for a right knee effusion. She had a 4-year history of rheumatoid arthritis, which was treated with intramuscular methotrexate and subcutaneous corticosteroids. She had been treated with tenoxicam in the past for arthritis flare-ups and had received 3 intra-articular corticosteroid injections for arthritic symptoms in the right knee. A plain radiograph of the right knee showed intra-articular joint space narrowing and subchondral bone edema, suggestive of osteomyelitis. Additional imaging suggested septic arthritis. A provisional diagnosis of septic arthritis was made, and the patient was treated with broad-spectrum antimicrobials. She recovered without sequelae, although she continued to have intermittent

Frontotemporal lobar degeneration (FTLD) with ubiquitin-positive inclusions (FTLD-U) represents a clinically heterogeneous group of disorders. A neuropathological subgroup of FTLD-U has previously been identified, with ubiquitin-immunoreactive intracytoplasmic inclusions in frontal or temporal lobes. To evaluate further the specific neuropathological features of FTLD-U, we examined 546 cases and found that all the cases examined had inclusions composed of ubiquitinated fibrillar material, but the appearance of the inclusions was not uniform. A subset of the cases had large numbers of inclusions with a characteristic granular appearance, resembling a distribution of optically small discs with a circumscribed, typically perikaryal rim. Similar inclusions, visualized by the Gallyas technique for amyloid, were also present, but there was no co-localization of either tau or ubiquitin immunohistochemistry and the tau-positive inclusions did not have a granular appearance. These cases were not distinct from other FTLD-U subgroups (compact/cortical FTLD-U, FTLD with motor neuron disease type C, and progressive supranuclear palsy), but they had no definitive clinical features to suggest that they might belong to any of these groups. The granular inclusions were present in both elderly and younger cases, and some were restricted to motor areas. Inclusions with a granular appearance were present in some cases with no evidence of FTLD-U, in parietal or occipital lob TorrentFreak Translation: Vietnam's first comedian is suing for defamation and demands that the BBC delete the clip that shows him fist-fighting with a referee. On September 8, actor and comedian Lê Hữu Anh allegedly beat up a referee during a gig at a rally promoting the European Football Championship, held in Vietnam earlier this year. . For his trouble, he was fined 2 million dong (€85). Lê Hữu Anh says he's filed a lawsuit in the Hà Nội Court on behalf of himself and his company, Như Anh. "Not only does this clip contain my activities after the incident, it also contains others who haven't even been proven to take part in the fight," Lê Hữu Anh is quoted by Nhân Dân Dân/ Lê Quang Danh. "The purpose of the lawsuit is to demand that the BBC make the clip disappear and stop spreading rumours about me." Lê Hữu Anh claimed that he never signed up to play the role, but rather that someone from the organisers asked him to do so. "The organisers left me with no other options," he said. "I felt a great deal of remorse when I saw my fight in the clip." The BBC shot the clip after the match, which took place in Hà Nội on May 15, and the clip was posted on BBC iPlayer and Youtube on September 3. "During the fight, the referee was lying on the ground bleeding and injured. "I got angry and grabbed his shirt while trying to defend myself. "The video shows me grabbing the referee by the shirt and hitting him. "I did this out of anger and justification. But if the video goes viral, it will cause me trouble." If you own the movie and did not know about it, you are now in luck.
