full I searched for some time and couldn't find anything exactly what I was looking for. So I thought I'd share my solution for the curious. I'm trying to find a partner who wants to sell me his old computer. I have a small SSD and a lot of hard drive space left. I want to put it into a new Mac mini. It has a 233 MHz G3, 512 MB RAM, 20 GB HD, 1.5 GB SSD, and 32 MB VIDEO. The motherboard doesn't work. To make a long story short, I set up a new mini in about one and a half hours. Just connecting all the wires and powering up, it's ready to boot. No longer! I'm going to build a mini clone of the running Mac mini. I'll take out the hard drive and connect it to an adapter, then put the adapter into the new computer. I got an instruction sheet from the Mac mini guy who built the mini. I've used it so I know what to do. I want a swap partition at the beginning of the hard drive to keep it that way. My plan is to install OSX 10.6 on it so it's functional, then upgrade it to 10.7 once it's installed. A couple of questions: 1. Would a 500 GB hard drive be enough space for Lion? 2. I know I have to partition the disk to get the boot working, but I'm fine with that. because iphones are mostly used across a much larger geographic area. For example, I want to make it so that if someone who is out of my range clicks on my online store, they get a "not found" message. At the moment, my server is under my domain name "www.carsonandfrey.com." I want to make it so that someone in Seattle can visit the site, but only if they are under my domain. Other questions I have are: 1. Is it possible for a web server like this to detect the geographic location of a visitor? 2. If someone is under my domain, what then? Do I need to set up a bunch of displays, something like two at one and two at another? Internet Explorer fails to display (because of a missing font) Cantata uue 10.0.0.200, and on Windows 8.1 it just says "go home." Yes, it's the
