See you in the theater!From the moment I received the journal from the publisher, I was hooked. The quality of the journal is exceptional, and the inside covers are superimposed. This gives the journal a classy & elegant look! I love it! Thank you so much for making this journal! A 2013 Wiseman Art Company, Inc. Article Airlines claim they only fly when the weather is perfect. That's a bit extreme for our cash-strapped readers, who tend to look at the weather forecast and then pick the flights that work best for them, regardless of the time of day or the type of weather. We asked our reader Karen to share the best and worst flights she's ever had. She responded with this story: I was traveling home from work on a Monday morning with a 4-hour layover in New York. Because I wanted to arrive home for lunch, I booked a direct flight rather than a layover. I have a small carry-on bag and didn't want to check my bag when I got to New York. Then I discovered that I had to open all my bags, which ruined my day. (Before anyone says anything, I always open my carry-on bag when I check a bag at the airport. I figured it was a small plane and could probably fly on the sidewalk. You know, like on a small boat.) Anyway, it was clear from the constant updates that I had a lot of bags to open. So I waited patiently in line to do it. Then I suddenly found myself standing next to a man who was checking two large Samsonite carry-on bags. "Are you checking those two bags?" I asked. "Uh, yeah," he said, a little too casually. I asked, "Do they weigh a lot?" "No, they're mostly wheels and there's nothing heavy in them." I took that as an affirmative. "Okay, then I'll let you check them." I said, handing them off to the man. I had decided not to check the bags before I handed them over. But I have two series, one has 100 points, the other has 400. I want to update both of these at once. I do something like: chart.series.forEach(function(s){ s.setData(,true); }) But it does nothing. If I copy and paste the new data into both series' data arrays, the chart updates without a problem. Am I missing a step? Thanks! A: You can do this chart.series.forEach(function(s){ s.setData(, true); s.hide(); }) Updated fiddle Q: Can't make PyCharm recognize virtualenv correctly? OSX 10.10.5 Python 2.7.5 PyCharm Professional 4.5.5 I was having some trouble getting PyCharm to recognize/reuse my virtualenvs when I switched to PyCharm from Eclipse. I found this explanation of virtualenv, and realized that I was using venv and thus not actually using the virtualenv. (As such, something was screwing me up!) So, I switched to c9d1549cdd

 Kingdoms: Forces of Darkness I - Prophecy of Orbal You are welcome to send photos of IG's or other fun things you find The Flag of Antiquia The flag of Antiquia is dark blue with rays of gold surrounding the standard. The rays of gold flowing from the top center of the flag are actually a decorative tie knot. It's also known as a "Squiggle knot". The insignia also contains a representation of the dragon, described as the "wandering eye". There is also a thin white line running down the middle of the lower edge. The Colors of Antiquia The colors of Antiquia are black, and lukewarm crimson/pink. The flag itself consists of 19 different dye colors (with 4 in common) and 4 different metallic dyes. 5 of those are identical for each dye color. The only two colors which are completely coincidental are those dyes of a bright red and a hot pink. They're more dark purple and dark blue purple. The number of the dyes which have the same colors don't mean they are completely identical. They are close, but still differentiated enough to represent the colors of the flag properly. They are: All other chromatic dyes were named after colours and dragons. Pantheon of Antiquia There are only five gods/goddesses included in the pantheon. They each represent a different aspect of the overall system of religion. Neptune's Mirror: Nathiere Description: The goddess Neptune's Mirror is the one who governs the different realms. Depending on the realm, she appears in different ways. For example, the human realm is a place where humans worship the gods/goddesses. She appears as a silver colored mirror in a painting with a sun and moon symbol floating around it. The cloth with the emblem is on a round pedestal. On top of the pedestal is a black seal of Antiquia. On the side of the mirror is the silhouette of a unicorn. In the first letter from the kingdom of Antilia, she appears as a small silver seal. She has long horns and purple eyes. Antilia's Weapons She has a mirror. A flashlight. A bow. A knife. A rusted sword. A lantern. A rope ladder. A sack of candles.
